Lingerie label

Posted by nannynags - 2008/02/24 20:23

Hi, I am looking to start a lingerie label, but as I am a software developer, I have no knowledge of the fashion industry regarding getting samples/patterns made. I would love some advice on how to get my sketches to a finished product. Also, is fabric something I would need to source myself or is this something that the manufacturer would be able to source for me? Any help at all would be great.

Thanks in advance,

Hi,

You will need to get in touch with a manufacturer, on Fashion Capital there is a Manufacturers Online Showroom if you look under suppliers or on the right hand side and you can type in your specifications, this will narrow down your choice of manufacturers. You can then discuss what fabrics you should use etc.

Hi, thanks alot for your reply. Do you know if the manufacturers source the fabric or is that something I would have to do myself?

Thanks again,
Krista

Hi,
Some manufacturers can help you with sourcing fabrics such as Cannon Jersey Fabrics and Scarlet Oliver however they may charge you a little more for this.

Hi, you seem to know more than me about this - could I ask you another question? Do I need to supply all the fabric necessary for the garment production or do I need to get my hands on sample fabric only? Do you know of anywhere in the UK where I can go and look at suitable lingerie fabric? I guess I need samples for a pattern cutter, but do I need to provide the sample maker with the fabric? or do they source it? Thanks again!!!:blink:
